

Old Chatham Golf Club Culture and Policies Review

Since its founding, Old Chatham has emphasized a culture of respect: for the game, for each other and for our facilities. We desire to have a minimum of formal rules, relying instead on this culture. At the same time, members in good faith can have different expectations. To avoid misunderstanding, the following document has been prepared. As an overview we should each strive to avoid discomfort to our fellow members.

Core Values

Old Chatham is guided by an enduring set of values which defines our relationships with members, staff and the golf community. These core values are the key to our success as a club. In short, we believe that how we do things is as important as what we do.

Camaraderie

Our members should build enduring relationships with fellow members.

Accountability

As members of the Club, we will act like owners. On a daily and continuous basis, each member will work to improve our club and its facilities. Members are responsible for the conduct of their family members and guests.

Respect

We will treat fellow members, guests and staff as we expect to be treated. We will support amateur golf and honor the history of this great game.

Excellence

We will be a Club of values, with limited rules to support these values. We will seek excellence by welcoming as members those who share our values.
